INSTRUCTION 4

The Court instructs the jury that circumstantial evidence shown and believed by the jury is just as effective as any other evidence, and is to be regarded in all cases without enlarging or belittling its force. If, when taken as a whole and fairly and candidly weighed, it convinces their guarded judgment, the jury should act on such conviction. The jury is not to fancy situations or circumstances which do not appear in evidence, but are to make those just and reasonable inferences from the circumstances proven which they, with guarded judgment as reasonable men, ordinarily would make under like circumstances in the grave transactions of life; and if the circumstantial evidence believed is of such character and force as to satisfy the minds of the jury of the defendant's guilt beyond reasonable doubt, it is their duty to find him guilty.

INSTRUCTION NO. 5

The Court instructs the jury that one of the basic foundations of our law is the presumption of innocence of the accused. Every person charged with a crime is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established by the Commonwealth beyond all reasonable doubt, and if there is upon the mind of the jury any reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused, the law makes it your duty to acquit the accused, Walter M. Norvelle. This presumption of innocence goes with Mr. Norvelle throughout the entire case, and applies at every stage thereof.

Reasonable doubt in every criminal case is not mere form to be disregarded by the jury, but it is an active, substantial part of the law of this land and before you can convict Walter M. Norvelle in this case, you must have an abiding faith in the truth of the charge and, based on the evidence in the case, believe that he is guilty beyond all reasonable doubt.

The mere suspicion or probability of his guilt, however strong, is not sufficient to convict, nor is it sufficient if the greater weight or preponderance of the evidence supports the charge, but in order to convict Walter M. Norvelle, his guilt must be proved so clearly that there is no reasonable theory consistent with the evidence upon which he can be innocent.

The jury is not at liberty to guess and where a fact is equally susceptible of two interpretations, one of which is consistent with the innocence of the accused, you cannot arbitrarily adopt that interpretation which incriminates him. The accused is not required to prove his innocence, and if after considering all the evidence, you entertain a reasonable doubt of the guilt of Walter M. Norvelle, then it is your duty and you must return a verdict of "not guilty".

INSTRUCTION 6

In considering whether or not the Commonwealth has met its burden of proving the guilt of the accused beyond reasonable doubt, the Court instructs the jury that you should not overlook the word "reasonable" nor its meaning. A reasonable doubt is a doubt which is founded on reason, and is not to be confused with imaginable or possible doubt, for the law does not say that a man must be proved guilty beyond every imaginable, conceivable or possible doubt.

In passing upon the sufficiency of the proof of the charge, the jury must limit its consideration to the evidence presented at the trial of this case, including the natural and reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom. The jury cannot go beyond such evidence to create doubt, nor can you go beyond such evidence to find inferences of guilt.

Furthermore, the jury should bear in mind that any doubt arising from lack of evidence, from conflicting testimony or from questionable proof of any particular fact, should be a doubt of a material fact essential to the proof of the guilt of the accused and not a mere doubt concerning immaterial and nonessential circumstances.

If, after a reasonable and honest consideration of all of the evidence, your minds are left in such a state of doubt as to prevent you from reaching a convinced belief of the guilt of the accused, then the Commonwealth has failed to meet its burden.

If, on the other hand, after an impartial and reasonable consideration of all the evidence in the case, you have an abiding conviction of the truth of the charge, you are then satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt.
